BIENNIAL FOR ART AND TECHNOLOGY

Meta.Morf 2010 - New.Brain.World!

The development and use of new technologies happens at an increasingly rapid pace, and biotechnology, nanotechnology and new communications and computer technologies are examples of new tools for artists, tools that can open new worlds of ideas as well as making previously not manageable ideas realizable.

New scientific insights often imply philosophical and existential problems and questions. Artistic and scientific research is continuously challenging and changing our perspectives. The artist as a direct and an indirect conveyor and interpreter of new knowledge and research, plays a crucial role for society's ability to both having a proper insight, and being able to maintain an adequate discourse, regarding the use of new technologies and scientific advancements.

Meta.Morf will for a broader audience present artists, musicians, writers and researchers with projects and performances that in different ways reflect man's position and possibilities in our globalized time.

The biennial includes art exhibitions at Trondheim Art Museum, Trøndelag Centre for Contemporary Art and Babel Art Space, as well as several conferences, workshops, film screenings and concerts throughout the entire month.

MAKING REALITY REALLY REAL

Consciousness Reframed

4.-6. November

Scandic Solsiden

In cooperation with the Planetary Collegium, University of Plymouth, TEKS is hosting

The 11th Consciousness Reframed Conference,
MAKING REALITY REALLY REAL

Interactions between the arts, technology, and the sciences, specially in respect of the mind and consciousness, are leading to the emergence of new artistic forms, technological systems, and cultural behaviours, as well as to re-evaluation of the hegemony of western science, and the significance, both spiritually and materially, of the practices and paradigms of other societies. Over the past eleven years, the Consciousness Reframed conferences have been convened in Europe and the Far East, involving leading-edge artists, scientists and scholars in an emergent discourse that is transdisciplinary, transcultural and syncretic. This year, hosted by TEKS, and as part of the Meta. Morf biennial of art and technology, an international group of experts will meet in this context, under the rubric Making Reality Really Real. Some 60 provocative, visionary, poetic and pragmatic perspectives, proposals and projects are to be presented, including keynote lectures by Marco Bischof, James Gimzewski, Luis Eduardo Luna, Ryohei Nakatsu and Victoria Vesna.
